

COMETA - Introduction of Practices

Real-project work

How many times did you hear the sentence: It's hard to get a job without previous work experience, and it's hard to get work experience without a job.

Real project work is a practice that can help to understand how to create an opportunity of learning by doing and how to get involve student given them a real project requested by a real client.

Traditional classroom-based educations and many third-party job training programs don't usually offer instruction tailored to the specific needs of individual employers. But when employers work with schools or other partners to design a real project, they can ensure that the curriculum and on-the-job activities cover the skills that workers need to succeed in crucial roles at their organizations.
